Upon opening the work of art, I was greeted by the SLG itself, sitting snugly in molded foam. I removed the marker and found another layer of foam below hiding the user manual, Dye slick lube, barrel sock, Proto battery, warranty card, an allen key set, and a full parts kit with a complete set of orings and new spring detents.

Okay, right now my friend has a SLG and he is using CO2 on it which the proto site says is fine, however the manual that comes with the marker itself says to only use Nitrogen or Compressed Air. He has already put more than a thousand rounds through it and there are no problems, just wondering if anyone knows anything else about this and why the proto site itself and the printed manual would ...
